Founder and Director

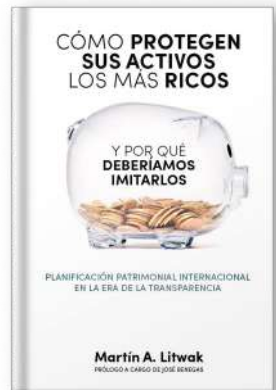

A non-profit organization that seeks to promote and defend international tax competition, low government spending, privacy, and property rights. It promotes education, academic research, and the development of technological projects linked to preserving individuals' right to privacy.

What the wealthiest do to protect their assets

And why we should do the same

A practical guide with options for efficient wealth structuring that demystifies the so-called “offshore jurisdictions” and explains the reasons for the existence of what are also known as “tax havens” and why they continue to be demonized by countries that take continued advantage of high taxes to finance ever-increasing expenditure –as well as by the supranational organizations that bring them together.

Tax havens and tax hells

A different look at offshore jurisdictions and tax competition.

Martín Litwak’s second book is explanatory, in everyday language, of tax issues and international taxation that do not require background knowledge. It also deals with tax competition between countries, and the use of jurisdictions with low or nil taxes, as well as with the ongoing tension that exists among individuals and national authorities concerning the subject of taxes.

Wealth planning for celebrities

How to avoid errors commonly incurred by artists and elite athletes.

Through this book, the public will have the opportunity to immerse themselves in the patrimonial problems that celebrities suffered through in plain language, but with deep concepts. They will be able to enter this world without being frightened by the complexity of the structures and issues and, at the same time, understand what happened to those celebrities.
